

Aging

This year, there will be more people over 65 than under five for the first time in human history. By 2060, the number of Americans over 65 will double, to 98m, while in Japan, 40% of the population will be 65 or older.

There will not be enough younger people to look after so many, unless robots help (and probably an influx of migrants is permitted, too).

Economist, February 16, 2019