

Authoritarianism

A number of elements contribute to authoritarian predispositions in lower-class individuals.

Low education, low participation in political or voluntary organizations of any type, little reading, isolated occupations, economic insecurity, and authoritarian family patterns are some of the most important. These elements are interrelated, but they are by no means identical.

Seymour Martin Lipset, Political Man