Kwiple dictionary

targeted advertising (tar' gi tid ad'vǝr tīz ing), n.

The use of surveillance software that enters users' computers without their knowledge, circumvents or disables their security software, renders their devices and online accounts susceptible to hacking, and destroys their privacy, all in order to send them online ads, many of which do the same.